

come back to you but you can perceive it much more profound and stronger. You will not give away autonomy by letting go of certain things or sharing things or responsibilities. Yes there is a danger to loose autonomy when you open up that much but this depends on the person you're working with and whether they take disadvantage from this or not, however I can promise you that in this case I would never do something like that. I'm honestly not interested in your status or what is your background in this process but to get the best out of you at this point and current moment, which means it will probably come with vulnerability from both your and my side because we are both learning in this process and I don't think we can go to our full capacity (whatever that means) without being totally lost from time to time. Patience, honesty and openness are the most important things I believe. The only thing I can offer you is to listen, reflect and share my observations with you but please know that my observations are never judgements.

Regarding status and people around you, yes I think this will always be a thing because we live in a world where status and name are being seen as very important and a lot of focus goes to this. I personally find this a shame and believe this is meaningless, I rather look at the work in its' essence and the person behind it. These observations and opinions from people are unavoidable but as long as you know why you do what you do and allow yourself to learn if that is what you want) than I believe you are on the right track and I think you are.

You have done many things, ~~and~~ great things and you have a lot of expertise which I respect a lot but we can bring all of this to a next level because I believe there is still much more you have