

you get when you imagined and when you get it it's kind of disappointing. Or if you stay in a situation for too long.

A: Suffering can be pleasure

Gus: Or having too much pleasure

A: too much coke ...

Gus: And there's the build up, like in our other scoring: it's not just the event, but also that which comes before or after.

K: as more details appear on a memory you can start choosing
A: Sometimes you have a clear path, but other times you deviate and get lost, don't quite know how to get back. Sometimes it can give you pleasure to hurt someone.

Gus: When you're in your scores, do you reflect on yourselves in the situations

K: Usually in the evenings and then I think I should maybe write about it.

B: Thing I wish I had said/done and then aren't fulfilled.
This comes back to me

Gus: I'm curious about this, the parts I give myself an easy ride with.

A: Sometimes I talk to myself while I'm dancing

J: No too

Gus: There's also an opinion in one's autobiography. The person has gone through a process of selecting what to put in it or not. At the end of looping next time: writing reflecting + going back in with how you feel about it now. The reflection can be whatever you chose it to be.

Neon lights drone-echo the room

The walls are pale with fatigue

A large dog honks a deep bark

Dusk melts away at the edges

Bodies absorb memories, recall moments
