

Distillation – a reflection 29.4.24 (after our meeting online)

1.
activating – not looking for, nor finding but

opening

a place

where bodying precedes language where languaging emerges from the body

2.
exploring this place, this space, this territory, these moving grounds, a certain density with time, a dilatation breathing, skinning, touching, tuning, attuning spending

loosing

inhabiting

be-coming

incorporating this level of presence embodying

in-bodying language

in-languaging the body

in-corporing bodies

in all directions

expanding

3.
going back to this state of be-coming, from the middle, from anywhere
anytime now

carrying this space of attention & being many in doing so – a shift

a singular presence sustained by the collective score & carried on by the horizon of our sharing

< a collective expansion of presence meets otherness in languaging bodies in bodying language >