

Pauses worked well for 'clearing' the picture.

They gave time to the spectator for consideration and thought.

They made movement look important after a silent pause, and the opposite as well. "Noise needed to be silent".

It seemed like every pause let the next movement be born again.

Impulsive movements, clear dialogues, strong interventions.

New stories, realities and conversations were built through pauses.